How does the writer portray the relationship between the two explorers?

As you read, consider the way the writer sets up (or deepens) character bonds. How would you apply this to your own essay writing?

One way the writer portrays the relationship between the two explorers is through the use of tense changes and dialogue. For example, when each explorer has about what happened back at camp, the events, "You call that hair back there progress?" This direct confrontation creates a sense of conflict and animosity between the characters, highlighting the underlying tension in their relationship.

Another way the writer depicts the relationship is through vivid physical descriptions and actions that set the hostile mood. Lee stumbling over a rock and Sarah reaching for her knife both serve as physical manifestations of their anger and distrust towards each other. These actions add a layer of hostility to the atmosphere, emphasizing the growing discord between the explorers.

Furthermore, the use of simile and metaphor is used to deepen the overall mood of the relationship. When they continue to search through the foggy forest, the writer reveals how the tension, "creaked like electricity" and "was about to ignite". The metaphorical language suggests a volatile hostility and a feeling of instability and progression.

The passage is further described in the last paragraph as a rift. The metaphor aptly portrays the emotional distance between them and there is a sense of concern that their relationship will not survive the difficulties they face in the forbidding forest.

A final way the writer portrays the fractious relationship is through the setting of the forest itself. The dense canopy, misty air, and towering shadows create the characters' sense of isolation and a warning that their strained relationship may not survive. The eerie and oppressive setting adds to the sense of tension and foreboding, creating a backdrop that parallels the explorers' deteriorating bond.

Overall, the writer's portrayal of the relationship between the two explorers through tense changes, physical actions, and the atmospheric setting effectively conveys the growing conflict and distrust between the characters, drawing the reader into the volatile drama of their forest expedition.
