North American forests at high risk for future catastrophic fires Forest settings are a magnet for recreational opportunities and for rapidly growing residential development putting an increasing number of citizens and their property into the path of wildfires Recordsetting wildfires initiated the twentyfirst century and motivated the rise to prominence of wildfire on the political agenda prompting important and farreaching new public policy initiatives To be effective these policies must be informed by science but that requires more than just improved knowledge about the physical and biological dynamics of fire and forest ecosystems Social values socioeconomic factors demographic trends institutional arrangements and human behavior must also be taken into consideration by the agencies and individuals responsible for wildland fire decision making The first book to integrate the social science literature on the human dimensions of wildfire People Fire and Forests reviews current studies from this broad interdisciplinary field and synthesizes them into a rich body of knowledge with practical management implications Chapters in the book highlight principal findings and common threads in the existing research and identify strengths and gaps They cover such topics as public perception of wildfire risk acceptability of fire management policies and community impacts of wildfire Designed to make relevant social science information more available and useful to wildfire risk managers and policy makers People Fire and Forests is also intended to encourage and guide further research into wildfire By exploring the theoretical and methodological issues surrounding human interactions with wildfire and describing the practical implications of this research this volume provides an essential resource for students scholars and

Braun, Wildlife Society, 2005 2nd Interface Between Ecology and Land Development in California Jon E. Keeley, Melanie Baer-Keeley, C. J. Fotheringham, 2000 The 2nd Interface Between Ecology and Land Development Conference was held in association with Earth Day 1997 five years after the first Interface Conference Rapid population growth in California has intensified the inevitable conflict between land development and preservation of natural ecosystems Sustainable development requires wise use of diminishing natural resources and where possible restoration of damaged landscapes These Earth Week Celebrations brought together resource managers scientists politicians environmental consultants and concerned citizens in an effort to improve the communication necessary to maintain our natural biodiversity ecosystem processes and general quality of life As discussed by our keynote speaker Michael Soul the best predictor of habitat loss is population growth and nowhere is this better illustrated than in California As urban perimeters expand the interface between wildlands and urban areas increases Few problems are more vexing than how to manage the fire prone ecosystems indigenous to California at this urban interface Today resource managers face increasing challenges of dealing with this problem and the lead off section of the proceedings considers both the theoretical basis for making decisions related to prescribed burning and the practical application Habitat fragmentation is an inevitable consequence of development patterns with significant impacts on animal and plant populations Managers must be increasingly resourceful in dealing with problems of fragmentation and the often inevitable consequences including susceptibility to invasive organisms One approach to dealing with fragmentation problems is through careful landplanning California is the national leader in the integration of conservation and economics On Earth Day 1991 Governor Pete Wilson presented an environmental agenda that promised to create between land owners and environmentalists agreements that would guarantee the protection of endangered species and out of this grew the pioneering initiative known as the Natural Communities Conservation Planning NCCP program California s vast expanse of seemingly endless resources has traditionally been viewed as justification for abusive land use practices The modern day recognition that resources are finite has led to greater concern not only for conserving what is left but for restoring abused landscapes Ecological restoration is a new science devoted to returning disturbed environments to a semblance of their pristine state Based on principles of revegetation restoration goes far beyond simple replanting rather the ambition of ecological restoration is to return landscapes to functioning ecosystems and is the focus of the last section Canadian Journal of Botany ,2007 Terrestrial Vertebrates of Tidal Marshes Russell Greenberg, 2006 Collection of twenty papers presented at a symposium held in October 2002 at the Patuxent National Wildlife Research Center Patuxent Maryland Annual Report New York State College of Agriculture and Life Sciences,
