Essays in Honour of E. H. Carr. Edited by Chimen Abramsky, assisted by Beryl J. Williams. London, Basingstoke: Macmillan, 1974. Pp. 387. £10.00.

The sixteen essays in this Festschrift are grouped under three main headings: nineteenth-century intellectual history, international relations and Soviet studies – all fields in which E. H. Carr has distinguished himself. Quite properly, a prominent place is reserved to Russian affairs, and in particular to the tragic paradox of the Russian revolution which, conceived as an act of liberation sans pareil, led within a decade or so to the horrors of Stalinism.

The seeds of this development may be sought in the history of the Russian (and European) radical intelligentsia before 1914. In a characteristically scintillating introductory essay Sir Isaiah Berlin demonstrates the importance of that relatively neglected figure, Georges Sorel – an apostle of social violence as a creative, life-enhancing act, whose ideas have much in common with those of the post-1968 'new left'. Sorel gave Marxism a twist in the direction of voluntarism – as Lenin did; yet no fruitful contact took place between the two men or their social philosophies. Although the Frenchman expressed admiration for the Bolshevik experiment, Lenin dismissed him as a muddle-head. The Communists were embarrassed by his suggestion that 'social myths' could play a valuable role in cementing the new order (although Stalin was later to employ this device on a grandiose scale) and by his warning that a proletarian party, having seized state power, might be tempted to perpetuate its rule by tyrannical means.

A similar prophecy had been made more than a generation earlier by Mikhail Bakunin. Arthur Lehning here examines his efforts to establish an international organization of revolutionaries sympathetic to his libertarian ideals, in opposition to the Marxian state socialists of the First International, whose latent dictatorial tendencies he percipiently discerned. Lehning makes rather too much of the 'realism' of Bakunin's ideas, to which he was unable to give effective political shape. More persuasive is Monica Partridge's argument that Alexander Herzen, who in his last years had to battle against both the anarchist and Jacobin currents on the Russian left, developed a sensible, balanced programme for the socialist movement, based on the establishment of a soundly based organization of intelligent propagandists. The Herzen of 1868–70, she shows, was close in spirit to nascent European social democracy. Alas, when this movement reached Russia in the next generation, it was soon all but transmuted into Bolshevism. This might be regarded as a renaissance of the nativist revolutionary tradition disguised as scientific Marxism.

The Bolshevik party had its idealists, to be sure, but in post-revolutionary Russia they were forced to yield to the exigencies of power politics; the revolutionary state had to assert itself against its real or presumed foes, whatever the cost. Those who dreamed, as the civil war ended, of replacing the conscript Red Army by a democratic people's militia were overwhelmed by the advocates of a strong regular force. In tracing this complex story of bureaucratic infighting, John Erickson uses recently published Soviet sources which indicate the key role played by former tsarist officers subsequently serving as 'military specialists'.
