Introduction

Both humanities are issues that are culture based and aesthetics as well. The fundamental role of humanities is to look at a society with the aim of fostering, highlighting and preserving. It is also ensuring that all that is best and beautiful is evoked. The role of humanities is to provide that all people are sophisticated articulated and lastly intellectually cosmopolitan. No wonder conservatives do hate the humanities and even the people who support it. Philosophy on the other hand, predominantly deals with tolerances and many others that are not within it. Therefore it can be defined as the cognition of human to ask and answer the question about the universe around us, both concerning and non- concerning humans. As a result, this definition makes philosophy be pertinent to all studies around it. Therefore, it is the philosophy of religion of mind, and philosophy of science as well.

Humanities are an academic discipline where aspects of human society and culture are being studied. Therefore .humanities also uses methods that are primarily critical, speculative and compost of historical element .humanities also involve the study of modern and ancient languages, philosophy, literature, human geography, politics law, and religion. In secondary schools, it is being offered as literature, art, and global studies

Anthropology

Anthropology is the study of humans or science of totality of existence of human. It is meant to integrate different aspects of social sciences human biology and humanities. In ancient time disciplines of academic institutionally have been divided into three broad domains. Whereby, the natural sciences seek to derive the general laws under verifiable experiments. This would mean that, the humanities aim to study local traditions through literature, arts, and music whereby emphasis on understanding particular individual's eras or events. In the United States of America, they have divided anthropology into different sub-fields that is archaeology biological or physical anthropology, anthropological linguistics and lastly cultural anthropology. This area is predominantly offered at the most undergraduate students. Notably, sociocultural anthropology is the most scientific study of humanities. Therefore, the main focus of anthropology is the provision of the most holistic account of humans and the nature of humanity as well. Consequently, this would mean that they only specialize in linguistics, cultural and historical aspects of whichever problem.

In western societies, anthrophony had risen as sciences being complex and industrial in nature. Consequently, within the anthropology trend and methodological drive, people have been studied in communities with a more social and straightforward organization.

Archaeology
