Abstract: The purpose of the particular article is to design an original reading lesson integrating the use of literary texts available online. In the first part, there is a brief description of the teaching situation. In the second part, there is a literature review, while in the third part, the original reading lesson is presented. More specifically, there is a presentation of the aims and objectives set in the lesson, the teaching materials and finally, the teaching process with detailed analysis of every stage (pre/while/post-reading). Finally, there is a discussion and a conclusion summarizing the ideas presented in the previous stages.

1. Description of the teaching context

The particular EFL class consists of 16 Greek learners aged 12-13 years old, attending the first grade of a Greek junior high school. All learners are monolingual, while their competence level ranges from intermediate to upper-intermediate (B1-B2). Most of them are to participate actively, while they show a positive stance towards EFL and the use of technology in the EFL class and they prefer group-pair-work. Finally, they express their preference for visual and auditory activities (Woodward, 2001:212-213), that make lessons more appealing, attractive and motivating to learners. The book taught is called 'B1 for all', while the teacher designs her own material, integrates numerous technological webtools in her lessons and boosts cooperative learning.

2. Rationale

Technology plays a vital role in everyone's life, while it is considered to be a significant tool in both learning and language learning, as it offers numerous opportunities, creativity and flexibility to learners (Papadopoulou, S & Vlachos, K., 2014). According to some learning theories (socio-constructivist, multiple intelligences, experiential learning and critical inquiry) the benefits of the use of technology in the EFL class are numerous, such as psychological, sociocultural and cognitive (Papaefthymiou- Lytra, 2014) and develop numerous of learners' skills. Additionally, Peachey (2019) supported that webtools boost learners' socialization and creativity, develop their cooperation-interaction skills and make them willing to share while they are supposed to work for a real-communicative purpose. In this lesson, the main technological tool used is a WebQuest. According to March (2004:42), a WebQuest is a lesson scenario around a particular topic, whose purpose is to solve a problem with the use of websites-webtools and its duration can range from one teaching lesson to numerous ones. As Makrogiorgou & Antoniou (2016) have mentioned WebQuests are beneficial for language learning, as according to other researchers they develop learners' high order thinking skills, creativity, collaboration (Irafahmi,2016; Kelly, 2000; Maddux & Cummings, 2007; Lamb & Tselchaimanot, 2005; March, 2004) and metacognitive skills (Katsoulaki, 2010). Finally, a WebQuest is composed of six parts, the introduction, the tasks, the resources used, the process followed, the evaluation and the conclusion (Dodge, 1997).
