N

nurses have traditionally composed the largest portion of health care workers in Canada. As such, they have enabled and participated in shaping the Canadian health care system and have made a significant impact on the health of individuals, families, and communities. Although public surveys identify nurses as the most trusted of health care providers, gloomy forecasts of massive nursing shortfalls persist. Nurses perceive their work as being undervalued, while others deem it too expensive in the face of persistent cost-cutting measures and concerns over the viability of government-supported health care and medical care. At the same time, nurses struggle to articulate what they actually do (Nelson & Gordon, 2006). Nursing policymakers, educators, and union leaders are challenged with defining and defending a unique role for nurses among other health care professionals and within a rapidly changing health care system (Milneuve & MacDonald, 2006).
