

Forming the PAST TENSE in German:

The perfect tense (Perfekt) is used the majority of the time when expressing past-tense events in conversational German. When using the perfect tense, use the participial form of the verb instead of the infinitive. The perfect tense is typically formed by first conjugating "haben" and then placing the participle of the verb at the end of the sentence. Participles for most German verbs are regular and created by adding the "ge-" prefix and replacing the "-en" ending with a "-t"...

machen ge + mach + t

Many participles take an irregular form. The most common of these irregular forms is the vowel stem change. Participles with vowel stem changes usually retain the "-en" ending after the stem, but still add the "ge-" prefix...

finden → ge + funden

Some participles are truly irregular. They don't adhere to either of the norms above. These participial forms simply have to be memorized!

Participles with "SEIN" as helping Verb:
