

THE AUSTRALIAN ENCYCLOPÆDIA

VOLUME L—A to Lys

The object of the "Australian Encyclopædia" is to supply in a sufficiently concise form all such information concerning Australia and matters Australian as is likely to be sought by intelligent persons in any part of the world.

The Editors have made it their policy—

- (1) to ensure the greatest possible accuracy and completeness by entrusting the various articles to those who may fairly be regarded as the soundest authorities on the respective topics. It goes without saying that, concerning the fauna, flora, geography, geology, resources, industries, political and social history, etc., of Australia, the best authorities are those who, being on the spot, have been intimately associated with such matters, and who can often lay their hands upon documents and evidence not elsewhere accessible.
- (2) while omitting nothing essential or pertinently interesting, to bring the articles within reasonable and readable compass.
- (3) to provide an adequate number of accurate and attractive illustrations (in colour or in black-and-white), maps, diagrams, etc.

How far they have succeeded in these aims may be judged from the unanimously favourable opinions of librarians, experts, the press, and other capable judges, some of which will be found on the reverse of this jacket.
