

A Brief History Of Female Ejaculation

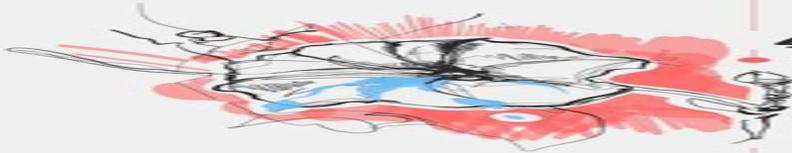

Text by Cat O Dowd
Illustrations by Elizabeth Feder

400bc

Hippocrates writes about female "semen," and how he thinks FE is necessary for pregnancy to take place. Aristotle disagrees with the baby connection, but reports women having wet dreams, ejaculating in their sleep, and waking up very excited. He observes that FE happens at orgasm and far exceeds male ejaculate.

160AD
Claudius Galenus reports that women "ejaculate semen" with pleasurable spasms. He studies non-sexually active women and concludes that women have to ejaculate their semen regularly or they will suffer terrible pain associated with fluid build up.

4th Century AD

Chinese Taoist texts record the wonders of FE using much more beautiful and evocative terms than we do today. The female prostrate was described as a "moon flower" gushing copious amounts of "nectar."

200-400 AD
The earliest Indian reference to FE is the Kamasutra, but other texts further explain that the key to sexual enjoyment and health is to make the woman "flow" before the man "flows."

826AD

A Chinese poem talks about the "milk fruit" (the area we now know as the "G-spot") and gives instructions for a man to stimulate this area with his finger or penis tip to bring forth the female honey.

1500s AD
Flemish anatomist, Andreas Vesalius, visits the vagina, creates semen or liquid during sex and ejaculate like men.

1600s AD

Reinier De Graaf explains how the periurethral glands are the female "G-spot" and the source of female ejaculate. He writes in great detail about the difference between vaginal lubrication and ejaculation.

1954 AD
Ernst Grafenberg reports women masturbating themselves to orgasm resulting in eruptions of fluid. When he tests the fluid, he detects no urine and concludes it came from glands associated with the G-spot.
